are now face to face with the large problems of a permanent civilization of high character. The greatest single effort made by President Taft in his administration was to secure an amicable agreement between certain nations for the settlement by arbitration of all international differences.

"The doctrine that the government is for the people must adjust itself to a new conception of what the interests of the people really are. The unwelcome spectacle of enormous expenditures by the government in the maintenance of standing armies and the development of navies suggests at once that the world's leaders are too willing to recognize conditions fraught with cruelty. The scholar can not contemplate such things with satisfaction or indifference. He regards the organization of society as a means to an end and would eliminate from it the possibility of cruelty and injustice.

"One must always recognize the necessity of making provision for his own maintenance. The opportunity and duty of earning one's daily bread is always imperative. Nevertheless it is fair to assume that every educated person will produce more than he will consume. He will amass something of resources that he can not utilize."

A certain wise man said—"Read not to contradict and confute, nor to believe and take for granted."

No — you'd better smoke

Velvet
THE SMOOTHEST TOBACCO

It is its own most convincing argument. We cannot tell you the full richness—the delightful smoothness, of Velvet. Nor can anyone else. You must learn that from your pipe.
